It;WASHINGTON (AP) — Top officials from the U.S. military have told Congress that Iran could kill or maim thousands of Americans in as few as several days as it responds to a U.S. air attack, though the officials say they do not believe the Iranians would use nuclear weapons to try to respond. The three-page classified memorandum presented to the House Armed Services Committee Thursday was discussed with some members of the committee in a classified session, and is being shared with other lawmakers. The U.S. officials told the committee that if Iran retaliates against U.S. strikes against the country's nuclear facilities, the numbers of casualties could rise significantly — or fall to a negligible number. The officials said the missile attacks could take place within a few days, and come in several waves over a period of weeks. Estimates for damage ranges from minor to catastrophic, depending on the size of the nuclear facility attacked. The head of U.S. Central Command, Gen. James Mattis, and other military officials told the committee that Iran could seriously threaten U.S. bases in the Middle East and interests in the region.
